In the last two years, a large number of new brands have entered the market, and sub-segments have been further developed. The market is developing either more convenient applicators or more specialist cleaners developed specifically for certain types of cleaning jobs. In spite of trends, Domestos has managed to keep its Thick Bleach range and has come up with innovations relevant to consumer needs.

Achievements

Domestos constantly helps educate consumers about the importance of home hygiene. Today, Domestos has become an icon and an expert in home hygiene, and considers this as an asset for further developments.

History

In 1787, the French chemist Berthollet discovered Sodium hypochlorite in Javel, the outskirts of Paris, the active ingredient in Domestos Thick Bleach products. Its ability to effectively whiten textiles was quickly discovered and put to commercial use with great success. By the end of the nineteenth century, after Louis Pasteur had discovered Sodium hypochlorite potent effectiveness against disease-causing bacteria, it became widely used as a disinfectant. Since then numerous studies have confirmed its high level of effectiveness in killing germs. It is widely recognised as having an unsurpassed disinfection spectrum, meaning that it can destroy the agents of disease such as bacteria, viruses, moulds and spores.

Domestos Thick Bleach is a cleaning product based on Sodium hypochlorite, the same chemical that makes drinking water safe and swimming pools clean enough to swim in. Available in 35 countries worldwide, from the Netherlands to India and Croatia, Domestos has a very long history.

Originating from William A. Handley's Newcastle workshop in 1929, Domestos bleach was first sold across North East England in stoneware jars which were refilled by door to door salesmen on bicycles. Consequently, Domestos rightly became the most well-known expert on cleanliness and hygiene. Its history at the same time, faced continuous renewals. Decades of experience and innovative Domestos developments brought greater effectiveness and ease of use to consumers, making cleaning easier in everyday housework.

Domestos was introduced to the Croatian market in 1995. Today, with its Thick Bleach range, Domestos is the number one selling universal cleaning product in Croatia.
